2Characteristics3Deployment5OperatorsHistory[edit]During the 1980s, the predominant missiles in Franco-Italian service were short-range systems such as the French Crotale, Italian Aspide or American Sea Sparrow, with ranges up to a dozen kilometres.. Thought was given in particular to the new missile's ability to intercept next-generation supersonic anti-ship missiles, such as the Brahmos missile developed jointly by India and Russia.. Aster also equips the French and Italian FREMM multipurpose frigates, though they will not be operating as part of a PAAMS air-defence suite itself but through Franco-Italian specific declinations of this suite.. This allowed the actual systems to have the characteristic of being specialised either in short-to-medium range 'point defence' (ships, for instance), or in medium-to-long range 'zone defence' (fleets). The missile is designed to intercept and destroy a wide range of air threats, such as supersonic anti-ship cruise missiles at very low altitude (Sea-skimming)[5] and fast flying, high performance aircraft or missiles.. In May 1989, a Memorandum of understanding was signed between France and Italy for the development of a family of future surface-to air-missiles.. Eurosam was formed shortly afterwards By July 1995 development had taken shape in the form of the Aster missile and test firing of the first Aster 30 took place.. 5 (1,191 m/s)[4]Aster 30: Mach 4 5 (1,531 m/s)[1]Inertial guidance with up-link [1]Active RF seeker.. [2] The name 'Aster' originates from the mythical Greek archer named Asterion (in Greek mythology), Asterion likewise receiving his name from the ancient Greek word aster (Greek: ἀστήρ), meaning 'star'.. Aster is primarily operated by France, Italy, and the United Kingdom and is an integrated component of the PAAMS air-defence missile system, known in the Royal Navy as Sea Viper..
